

"Reducing Stress: An Introduction to Construction Agreements"

by

Neil Williamson
Associate
Construction and Engineering Department
Ward Hadaway

It is essential that surveyors are aware of the legal implications of the documentation relating to the development of both major regeneration schemes and smaller individual developments for clients. Many of the stressful, costly and time-consuming issues which are often encountered when finalising these documents or during projects can be avoided (or their effects mitigated) if the issues are fully considered at the outset of a project. This is your opportunity to refresh your existing understanding of the documents required and the issues which are best addressed early in the project to avoid later problems.

Neil has a breadth of knowledge and experience in the sector and advises both private and public sector clients on negotiating a full range of construction documentation and resolving construction disputes.
